“The Town that Food Saved,” By Ben Hewitt

One Book One Community announces the book to read for Spring 2012. Rural Hardwick, Vermont was on its way to becoming a statistic, doomed by its unraveling economy. Enter agricultural entrepreneurs with the aim of creating sustainable economic development to wean the nation off its dependence on industrial, processed food.

Cooperative agriculture like that brought to life in Hardwick attracts investors, brings businesses back to main street, and creates jobs. Ben Hewitt details the near-death experience of this rural community, and its dramatic and sometimes painful turnaround. Read this inspiring book, and attend the slate of events available in the communities.

Ben Hewitt will be at Bridgewater State University, April 24th, 7:30pm, Horace Mann Auditorium. Book sales and signing will be at 7pm preceding the event.

Kristi Marsh, Easton Author and Mom, Presents: “Goin’ Organic with a Budget Friendly Attitude”

Saturday, February 18th, 11am-1pm, Bridgewater Public Library

Kristi Marsh has just published her first book, “Little Changes,” about healthy, chemical-free living. She will answer the compelling questions; How can I get started? What is the definition of organic, sustainable, local and natural? How do I find farm fresh fruits and vegetables, and happy meat, healthy eggs, hormone free milk? Book sales and signing will follow the talk.
