Bullying

Throughout many years, people have been bullied for countless and frivolous reasons. First and foremost, people are usually bullied because they act differently than others, therefore they may be known as the wild child. People may also get bullied because they may look a bit different than most people, such as wearing glasses, born in another country, or having medical illnesses. People are mostly picked on because they are thought of as a weakling, and the bully knows that they won't retaliate. Most bullies have low self-esteem, and engage in bullying because they think it will higher their self-esteem, when it will only cause suffering. Last but not least, people might be picked on because they are extremely intelligent and the bully is jealous that he or she is not. As you can see, many innocent people are bullied for numerous and absurd reasons.

I think that it is extremely unfair to people who are bullied. First, I think that it is unfair because the person being picked on has probably done nothing to offend or hurt the bully. I also think that people are picked on for their weaknesses, which is most likely exploited by the bully. Furthermore, I think that it is wrong because the people being bullied suffer the most, and didn't even do anything to deserve it. Then, as they ache in pain either physically or mentally, they are laughed at by the bully as he or she stand up in pride over them. In conclusion, I feel that it is tremendously unjust for people to be bullied for such ridiculous reasons.
